INTRODUCTION

THE Presidential Executive Order in the last fifty years has become a governmental instrument of broad and increasing importance, a fact made particularly obvious since 1933. In use from the earliest days of the Republic, the Executive Order was at first employed mainly for the disposition of the public domain, for the withdrawal of lands for Indian, military, naval, and lighthouse reservations or other similar public purposes. Later it was much used for the creation, alteration, or disposition of forest, oil, gas and coal reserves, and for the withdrawal of public lands from sale or entry for purposes of accurate classification. It was also used to establish, transfer, and abolish land offices and land districts, supplementing acts of Congress. It became an essential instrument in the evolution of the civil service, blanketing into the classified service additional positions as authorized by law, promulgating rules for the service, and making plentiful individual exceptions and exemptions from those rules, both with and without the approval of the Civil Service Commission. It was used to effect various regulations applying to governmental employees outside as well as inside the growing classified service. It established days of mourning for the death of famous citizens. It extended Indian trust period allotments. It was employed to give public notice of changes of general interest in the regulations governing the consular and diplomatic services. Actual allocations of government funds were made, beginning with the blanket allotments for expenditures in the possessions newly acquired from Spain at the beginning of the century. Customs districts and offices were set up or altered by Executive Order. Regulations for the early government of the Canal Zone were established. Army regulations on punishments, both in peace and war, and on allowances for subsistence and housing, were set forth by the President through this vehicle.

During World War I, the use of the Executive Order was widened as executive authority and power increased and its scope was again greatly broadened. Important agencies such as the Food Administration, the Grain Corporation, the War Trade Board, and the Committee on Public Information were set up by Executive Order. Presidential powers, vastly increased in wartime, were specifically delegated to subordinate officers by Presidential Order. Defense appropriations were allocated. Defensive sea areas were established. Censorship of the foreign language press was delegated to the Postmaster-General. Rules were established governing the behavior of enemy aliens. The interned ships of enemy powers were assigned for use. Sale of property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian was regulated. Rules for wartime radio broadcasting were established. Bullion exports were regulated, and the non-combatant duties of conscientious objectors to military service were detailed.

During the New Deal, the Executive Order was to see even wider and more vital usage, both in the administration of the recovery and reform programs and in the evolution of the defense and war projects. Agencies such as the National Labor Board and the War Labor Board were created by Executive Order. The reorganization of the Executive departments and independent offices under the act of March 3, 1933,¹ was effected by Order. Relief funds were allocated to specific agencies, NRA codes were approved, and part of the machinery for farm loans and the establishment of the AAA were set up by Presidential Order. The export of bullion was embargoed. The bank holiday was ended, the Civil Service greatly extended, and the conservation program expanded by Executive Order.

DIFFERENT TYPES OF PRESIDENTIAL ORDERS

The President may issue orders in any one of three roles: as the civil Executive carrying out specific authorizations of the Congress; as the administrative head of the Executive branch of the government; or, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. These different types of Presidential Orders today are known as "Executive," "Administrative," and "Military" Orders, respectively. However, prior to the Roosevelt administrations no distinction was made between the first two, and many "Executive" orders of earlier date have been of an administrative nature. He may also issue "Presidential Regulations." These are Executive Orders, but were not so headed through the inadvertence of the person who drafted the Order, or of the Bureau of the Budget and the Department of Justice which today must pass on every Order prior to its submittal to the President. The List and Index do not include Military Orders, which are issued under a different authority and for very different purposes, or the Orders which have never been officially numbered, or the recent categories of Administrative Orders or Presidential Regulations. All are listed in the supplementary List and Index of Presidential Executive Orders: Unnumbered Series published by the Survey in New Jersey.

The President may also order one of his Cabinet to issue an Order in his name, or upon his direction. Such Orders, signed by officials other than the President, are included in this list only where they have received numbers. They are footnoted with the exact signature of the signer and his title as given on the Order.

The President also very frequently sends letters or memoranda to his subordinates, directing them to do some particular thing, or clothing them with some particular power. These technically may be called "Presidential Letters" and as such are omitted from this compilation, except for a very few early letters which have the applicability and general interest of later Orders, and which have been included by Government officials in the numbered series.

VARIETIES OF THE EXECUTIVE ORDER

As anyone who is acquainted with the earlier Executive Orders knows, no uniformity of form or style was established prior to 1873, when, in the second administration of President Grant, the present form of the Order became relatively well stabilized.

This variety of form creates the problem, particularly acute in the earlier years, of just what is and what is not to be classified correctly as an Executive Order. Where today the President would issue a formal and detailed Order based on a draft prepared for his signature by a Cabinet officer, many of his predecessors merely inscribed the word "Approved" at the bottom of a Cabinet member's recommendation. At other times, the President would write "Let it be done," or "I approve the accompanying recommendation, and order that it be effected." Such Orders are indicated by an abstract of the recommendation on which the President acts, enclosed in brackets, and followed by the word "approved."

Some orders were signed at the President's direction by his secretary, such orders being incorporated in the numbered series as late as 1899.² Some were signed, also at the direction of the President, or in the absence of the President, by the Secretary of State.³ In fact seven of the first thirty-three Orders of the numbered series (E. O.s 1 to 28-1 inclusive) were signed by the latter official. Recently the Federal Register has at least momentarily reverted to earlier practice and thereby has revived problems thought dead for fifty years, by publishing in the numbered series occasional Orders of the departmental heads⁴ which have the same effect in the same fields as earlier Presidential Orders.

AVAILABILITY OF THE EXECUTIVE ORDERS

Some compilations of Orders have been published on such special subjects as Indian Reservations, the Panama Canal, the PWA, Veterans' Regulations, etc. Many Civil Service Orders appear both in the Annual Report of the Civil Service Commission (Washington, 1883—), and in the compilation known as Civil Service Acts, Rules, Regulations, etc. (Washington, 1883-1937), though in both compilations many Orders are given only by abstracts of the original. Other Orders appear in the United States Code (Washington, 1935, with supps.), the *Canal Record*⁵ (Mount Hope, C. Z., 1907-1928), the Handbook of N.R.A. (Washington and New York, 1934), the Codes of Fair Competition (Washington, 1933-1935), the Report of the Alien Property Custodian (Washington, 1918), Emergency Legislation Passed Prior to December 1917 (Washington, 1919) and Immigration Laws and Regulations (Washington, 1939, with annual supplements since). Still other sources are listed below pp. 6-8.

The recent Code of Federal Regulations of the United States contains a listing of all Orders cited anywhere in the Code, arranged both by Code title, i.e. subject, and by number. But since the Code contains only Orders of current applicability and general interest, obviously a great many Orders are not there listed. Since its inception in 1895 under the General Printing Act of that year,⁶ the Documentary Catalog has listed every Executive Order printed in slip form by the Government Printing Office, whether included in the numbered series or not. From 1925 to 1936, these slip copies of Orders were made available in a small number of depository libraries throughout the country.

The Federal Register Act of June 26, 1935,⁶ provided for the transmission to a new Division of the Federal Register in the National Archives of three copies of certain types of public documents, including Executive Orders, prior to Presidential signature. This Division was charged with keeping the original when signed, and with transmitting one copy to the Government Printing Office for publication in the new Federal Register, the first copy of which appeared March 14, 1936.

According to this act, there were to be printed in the Federal Register

“(1) all Presidential proclamations and Executive Orders, except such as have no general applicability and legal effect or are effective only against Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents or employees thereof; (2) such documents or classes of documents as the President shall determine from time to time have general applicability and legal effect, and (3) such documents or classes of documents as may be required so as to be published by Act of Congress.”⁴ This naturally greatly increased the availability of many of the Orders for the period since 1936, but the restrictions as to “general applicability and legal effect” substantially limits the number of Orders appearing in the Register. A large number of Orders still are published only in slip form, though every Order must today pass through the Division of the Federal Register, where it receives a number, whether subsequently published in the Register or not.

A full file of the Orders of the numbered series is maintained in the State Department Records, National Archives, while current Orders are filed in the Division of the Federal Register. There is also a complete file of those Orders in the Law Library of Columbia University.

As will immediately be seen, all the above sources represent only partial approaches to the total mass and subject matter of the Executive Orders. Of the great bulk of the material in these Orders there is today no other full list, no other detailed index.

THE NUMBERED AND THE UNNUMBERED ORDER

No distinction can be made between the numbered and the unnumbered Order on the basis of subject matter, general applicability, public interest, or legal effect. The sole difference is an arbitrary one based entirely on whether the given Order does or does not bear a number.

This numbering was begun by the Department of State in 1907, at which time all of the relatively few Orders then on file in that Department were arranged chronologically and given a number, as was every Order subsequently filed. These numbers are recorded in the Documentary Catalog from 1907 on (60th Congress ff). Back Orders later added to this file were given “in-between” numbers.⁷

But still many Orders did not make their way into the files of the State Department, and so did not receive numbers. President Hoover made a fairly successful attempt to end this situation and to regularize the preparation and handling of these documents by Executive Order 5220,⁸ of November 8, 1929, in which he outlined a procedure by which drafts of both proclamations and Orders were to be sent in triplicate to the White House via the State Department, each draft bearing a suitable title, and conforming both to the latest decisions of the United States Geographic Board on the spelling of geographical terms, and to the Style Manual of the Government Printing Office on orthography and punctuation. The State Department was to keep one copy of the draft Order and the signed original. This Order (5220) was slightly modified by Executive Orders 5658 of June 24, 1931, and 6427 of August 10, 1933. Orders approving NRA codes of fair competition were specifically excepted from this procedure by Executive Order 6497 of December 15, 1933. Present procedure is regulated by Executive Order 7298 of February 18, 1936.*

The volume of unnumbered Orders was substantially reduced by the numbering system inaugurated in 1907. The procedural Orders since November 8, 1929, have practically eliminated the unnumbered Order.

Some eighty-six hundred Executive Orders found a place in the numbered series up to January 1, 1939. The importance of the data embodied, and the actions taken in these Orders has made this volume seem an addition worth making to the existing tools for the study of American history, law and government. To this material the List is the calendar or chronological key, the Index the topical key.

The thanks of the editors are extended to Columbia University, which, through its Department of History and its library staff, particularly Dr. C. C. Williamson, Miles O. Price and Dorothy M. Peake, has contributed so much to the present volume. The staff of the National Archives has generously aided the editors in answering many of the questions of incorrect dating and other problem entries which occur in the available printed Orders. To Dr. Philip Hamer is due our special thanks. To him goes credit for eliminating a considerable number of possible errors. To us belongs the blame for any which may remain.

The editors wish to express their gratitude to Dr. Luther H. Evans and Sargent B. Child, former national directors of the Survey, to J. L. Ginniff, Audrey MacMahon, and Dr. George C. Groce of the New York City WPA, for their personal interest and attention which were of appreciable aid to the production of this volume; and to Helen Calhoun, Eva Flint, Elizabeth Hollos, Sally Cathrell, Ethel Pitney, and Virgil Regalbuto, members of the compiling staff, without whose understanding help the task would have been much greater than it proved to be.

THE LIST

A CAREFUL check was made of the files of Executive Orders in the Division of the Federal Register in the fall of 1938, and every Order at that time included in the numbered series has been here listed. The List is based upon this source. The full text of each Order has been used as the basis of each abstract.

The effect or extent of amendments in the various series of regulations is given in the entries in the List where stated in the Order, or where obvious from the text, except for occasional Civil Service Orders, or Orders amending the Consular Regulations or the Instruction to Diplomatic Officers which are so long and so involved as to make it impossible to detail the full extent of the changes made. In such cases the entry merely notes that the rules have been "amended" or "revised." The reader may know from this that the changes have been too extensive to list or that their effect is obscure.

A knowledge of certain special word usages in the List will help its user get fuller information from the entries than would otherwise be the case. The word described appearing in land orders indicates that the lands are described in detail in that Order. In other land orders, reservations are spoken of as enlarged or diminished if only additions or subtractions are effected by the Order. If some lands are added and others removed from the reservation by the same Order, the word modified is used to describe the action taken.

Similarly specified or designated, as applied to people, positions, etc., indicate that the text of the Order actually names the people or positions affected.

The names of customs collection districts are entered (in parentheses) after the number of the district only where the name of the district differs from the name of the State mentioned earlier in the entry.

Many Orders bear the footnote Has form of a proclamation. This means that the Order is drawn either with a series of "whereas" clauses, or with the conclusion "Done at the City of Washington," both of which are typical of the formal proclamation, or that it is drawn to contain both. All NRA code Orders have the form of a proclamation in this sense. Exceptions to this rule are noted in the entries.

The words Miss or Mrs. are used only before those women's names which without such designation might be confused with men's.

The words United States are omitted from the titles of official bodies except where their omission might create ambiguity. When used as a noun, United States is spelled out; when used as an adjective, it is abbreviated.

All Orders are listed in their chronological order. This means that occasionally the numerical sequence is disrupted. In such cases a see entry refers the reader from the place he might expect to find that entry in its numerical order to the date under which it appears. Chronological order rather than numerical order was used because of the occasional violations of logical sequence which strict adherence to numerical order would have caused.

All List entries use a contracted form of Department, Departmental head, bureau and office names. These briefed forms are designed to conserve space without detracting from the clarity of the entry's meaning.

Abbreviations in the text of the entries include State names appearing after other geographical place names within those States, months in dates, designations of length or area, and the titles of military officers preceding the name. The following abbreviations are also used:

Dept.	Department
E. O.	Executive Order
Proc.	Proclamation
Sec'y	Secretary
